Cahoots NI, founded in 2001, is a Belfast based theatre company creating highly visual work for young people and their families and is distinguished by the use of magic and illusion to deliver an audience experience that is vivid, memorable and empowering. An award winning arts organisation within the Northern Irish cultural landscape Cahoots NI has an established local, national and international footprint.

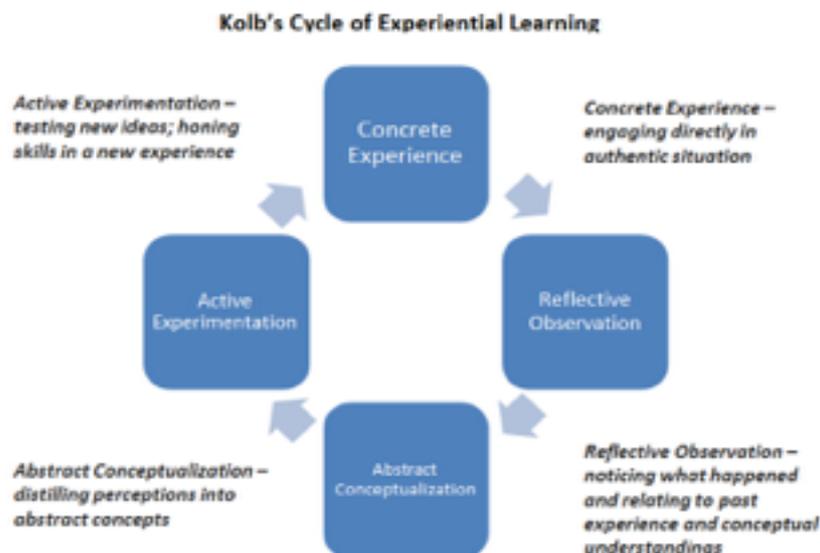

Paul Bosco Mc Eaney, founder and Artistic Director of Cahoots NI, is an experienced and engaging creator and facilitator of creative training within the arts and business sectors.

Paul works alongside Aidan McGrath, a director of Cahoots NI, and an experienced management trainer, using the artistic processes as a creative, and sometimes playful, approach in order to have a powerful impact. Using elements of theatrical production such as self-awareness, imagination, role-play, creativity, and team interdependencies, their training ensures more effective management, listening and communication, problem solving, sales, negotiation and presentation skills.

Cahoots NI, with its wealth of experience in theatre and communication can spark the participant's imagination, enhance their level of understanding and engagement and impact their internal emotional state in a way that will effect personal change. Without change there is no point in training.

Ensuing benefits can include enhanced leadership skills, clarity of communication, presentation skills, creative management skills, better sales and negotiation skills and the ability to communicate your company's vision.

Cahoots NI's training is based on the principles of Kolb's Experiential Learning model, which is an established and proven holistic model of the adult learning process which is consistent with what we know about how people naturally learn, grow, and develop. The learning cycle basically involves four stages namely: concrete learning, reflective observation, abstract conceptualisation and active experimentation.

Cahoots NI's training is priced depending on the work involved and normally is costed after a preliminary discussion with the client, and once requirements and outcomes are agreed and the course outline is designed.
